Foot Removed by the "Bloodless Process" and Not a Drop of Blood Spilled.

[From the Minneapolis Tribune.] That many wonderful achievements in surgery have been accomplished of late our readers are well aware. Minneapolis surgeons are not behind the times, by any means. They are a wide-awake body of men, who are ever on the alert for new and improved methods of performing the work falling to their lot, and some of them are always trying to perfect the facilities at hand. Surgery has been perfected to such an ex-tent that a limb may be amputated without the large loss of blood and consequent danger that formerly made the thought anything but pleasant to contemplate.

The process now becoming very popular is that technically known as the "bloodless process." Its advantages have been spoken of before, and now another case comes to our notice whereby a very delicate operation has been performed without the loss of a single drop of blood.

It will be remembered that a lad of thirteen years of age, named William Dunn, and a son of Frank Dunn, engineer on the C. M. St. P. and M. railroad, was so unfortunate as to have his heel crushed beneath the wheels of a train. Mortification set in, and amputation became necessary. The operation was performed last evening. The bloodless bandage" was used, and with most astonishing results.

Drs. Ames, Salisbury, and Webb performed the operation of taking off the right foot. During the cutting process not a drop of blood was seen. The little fellow is now doing remarkably well, and the doctors are jubilant over their success. It certainly is a most wonderful achievement. This process has been employed by these physicians for some time past, but this is the greatest success yet performed by its use.

"See here," said a wild-eyed man, rushing into our sanctum the other day. "See here, Mr. Editor, have you heard that Donati's comet has broken loose and is coming straight for us at a gait of a million miles a minute ?"

"Sport!" retorted the stranger; "what do you mean by sport?" "Why, I mean a little wreck-creation, that's all," answered the funny man.
